

Snapshot 5

Welcome to Lost and Found Snapshot #5 – not only featuring some breakaway dance moves but also a treasure trove of photography and a feisty monkey. Look out for one bonus snapshot before we launch Lost and Found Volume 4 – guest edits, unique giveaways and Melbourne secrets pinging into your inbox from June until September.

Arts

Centre for Contemporary Photography

Launches are great at the Centre for Contemporary Photography \(CCP\) because the cool people standing outside in the gutter have something to see too. In fact, CCP's night projection window can only be seen from the street. Watch out for Santina Amata's new projection, featuring the artist swinging about in oversized heels, from sunset tonight. Those who actually go inside know there are four galleries at CCP, laid out in a spiral that leads to a tiny shop in the centre with a treasure trove of prints, books and Lomo cameras. Everybody wins!

Nightlife

Lindy Hop at The Toff

Many people don't know the Lindy Hop when they see it. They think it's just swing dancing, but that's where they're wrong. And 'Shorty' George Snowden would have told them so had they been at Manhattan Casino on June 17, 1928 when he "got tired of the same old steps and cut loose with a breakaway." Fox Movietone News asked him what up, and he told them: "The Lindy!" Now JT Tenaglia is letting Shorty's secrets loose with 6.30pm Monday classes at close-enough-to-the-Savoy The Toff in Town. Bring $14 and some shoe-shine.

Level 2, 252 Swanston Street, Melbourne, tel: 03 9639 8770.

Win

No-one knows why Chris Flynn called his Melbourne-based independent publishing house Falcon Vs. Monkey, Falcon Wins. Perhaps there is something he hasn't worked through yet. But the name of his fiction quarterly, Torpedo, is easy to remember and its fan base grows hourly. The current issue (dedicated to Richard Brautigan) has almost sold out. Lucky we have an annual subscription to give away. To enter, tell us what distracted the monkey. Email us (use the link, don't reply) – including your answer in the subject line – by 5pm, Monday April 6.
